

How to date ...

Christine Bullock

Indulge After Dinner

"I love a guy who likes dessert. I will eat triple- or quadruple-chocolate anything every single night of the week, so I need someone who doesn't make me feel guilty for eating it by myself. I also really like sweet wine—like Riesling—so it's a requirement that a man be able to split a bottle with me."

Be Lazy on Weekends

"My family was really into watching sports, and I still love it when a man can spend a Saturday or Sunday lounging on the sofa watching college sports or NFL. He should be wearing something like big, baggy sweatpants with a sports T-shirt and a baseball cap. I'm from Pittsburgh, so if he likes the Steelers, Penguins, and Pirates, that's a pretty big bonus."

Dress Down After Work

"When a man comes home from work wearing a suit, there's that moment when he loosens his tie and unbuttons the top button of his shirt. The suit shows his ambition, and the loosened collar shows that he's able to relax with me in our home. That look—both dressed and casual at the same time—that's really sexy."

Smell Dangerous at All Times

"It's important for a man to smell good every day, but I'm not into the clean-breeze scent. I prefer old-school colognes that have a tobacco-cigar scent with just a little mix of sandalwood or amber sweetness. I like my guys to smell like old-school Russian mafia."

MEET CHRISTINE

She teaches Pilates and yoga, but you're more likely to recognize her from Equinox—in February, she was the face of the gym's national video campaign. She's also pretty darn good in the kitchen. "I've never poisoned anybody," she says. We'd risk it.

